I have experienced two positive incidents over the past year. Firstly, I visited New Zealand on my high school trip. There, I talked to local people in English, and they understood my English. I was also able to communicate with the local high school students at a shopping mall. Using English, I was able to make them understand why I went there and where I was planning to visit. The other good memory I have is of making a new friend who now lives in Singapore. We got to know each other better over the Internet and still continue to communicate once a week in							1
Engl	ish. The	se two	events ha	ve bec	ome som	ething	special to	me no	ow.

I have two reasons why learning geography in high school is important. Firstly, because of globalization, not only learning foreign languages, but also learning about different types of cultures, ways of thinking and communication styles is important for students to become truly global people. The second important thing is to learn the locations of all of the countries and major cities in the world.
Before talking about different people's life styles and customs, we need to know where they live first. Understanding these two aspects is very useful for successful communication, such as when using English as a global language.
